CIA GLOBAL WAR PLAN FOR CLANDESTINE OPERATIONS

1. GENERAL.

a. Purpose: The purpose of this plan is to define the major missions of CIA wartime clandestine operations and to establish the general assumptions and concepts which will guide detailed planning for wartime organization, operation, and support. This and subordinate plans will become effective and will supersede the current "Clandestine Services General Plan for FY ____ -- Cold War" on D-day or when otherwise directed by the Director of Central Intelligence (DCI).

b. Definitions: (See Tab A)

c. References: (See Tab B)

d. Situation: The analysis of the situation and the basis for assessment of probable developments is contained in pertinent military plans and estimates, Office of Current Intelligence Handbook Series, National Intelligence Estimates, and National Intelligence Surveys, and, therefore, will not be repeated herein.

e. Assumptions:

(1) There will be little or no warning prior to the actual initiation of hostilities, inasmuch as the Armed Forces of the Sino/Soviet Bloc are in an advanced state of readiness for war, and could initiate offensive operations with little or no additional mobilization.

(2) The Soviet Bloc's capabilities for overrunning the Eurasian land mass are such that no assurance can be made on holding forward operating and support bases for any protracted period. However, the base areas in the U.K., Libya, Japan, Okinawa, the Philippines, and the Iberian Peninsula can be held.

(3) While a large majority of the population in Satellite areas will be neutral or passively friendly to the West, no more than a small minority will be disposed to take active measures against Soviet Bloc forces until there is clear evidence that Western military forces will prevail.

(4) Prior to D-day, the U.S. and its allies will possess a very limited capability for developing clandestine assets in denied areas. On D-day, little U.S. clandestine capability will have been developed within most areas under Soviet domination.

(5) On D-day the U.S. and its allies will possess a significant clandestine capability in most of the presently nondenied areas.

(6) The chaos and disruption attending the outbreak of war will provide opportunities to exploit clandestine operations.

(7) Clandestine operations can be initiated in the early stages of the war by:
